YALE COACH Gave Points to Football Candidates on Wednesday.

More than a score of candidates for the Windham high school football team were out in togs Wednesday aft-ernoon and were put through many of the fundamental stunts of the game.

ernoon and were put through many of the fundamental stunts of the game. The fellows are knuckling right down to business and the prospects are bright for a good eleven.

Added interest was shown Wednesday because of the presence on the field of a coach who arrived from Yaie university in the afternoon. The man who is showing the squad the rudiments of the great game is Frank Dudley, a stockily built young man who has every appearance of being well versed in the ethics of football.

There will be some keen competition for a number of the positions on the eleven. Manley, who has always been ranked as the school's best punter, is back in school and out for an end position. He can be called back to do the bulk of the punting and can also be used at critical stages of a game for a drop or placement kick.

Captain Richmond, Crane, Jordan, and Burns are at present filling the backfield positions. The shifting of Burns to quarterback adds materially to the strength of the team. Harrington, is more of a tower of strength in the center of the line than ever and the rest of the line positions will have to be contested for before any final selection is made. A good bunch of spectators were on the field.

Mr. Bennett was very well known in Danielson, where he had lived for many years. During his early life he was an overseer in a cotton mill for a time, but gave up this work to satisfy a craving for travel that took him into distant quarters of the world. He was away for years, visiting first one section and then another. He could relate varied and highly interesting experienced when he was in a mood to do so, although he was very reticent and seldom talked of those things excepting to friends.

Due to Normal Schools. . "In this connection it may be said that the normal schools of Connecticut maintained by the state at large ex pense for the purpose of improving th pense for the purpose of improving the standard of its schools, are actually proving to be a means of depriving the state of much of its best teaching talent, thus tending to compel the less wealthy towns, at least, to content themselves with the less efficient or untrained. untrained.

Benefit New Jersey.

"This is by nq means a discredit to the schools as such: it is a high tribute to their reputation for training excellent teachers, but it may at least he questioned whether it is profitable for the state of Connecticut to spend for the state of Connecticut to spend tens if not hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in training its young women to be teachers, while these schools place at the disposal of New Jersey superintendents their facilities for judging the comparative value of graduates in such a way as to cause many, perhaps even a majority of the best to take positions outside the state No objection, of course, could be made to any teacher securing a better position through ordinary channels, and such competition must be squarely met, but it is apparent that many of these positions are obtained solely on the recommendation of the normal schools without the candidates having been approached directly by the employed.

"The result is that many of the most competent teachers left to us are not those trained in the normal schools. They are young women with natural talent for the work, who have gained ability through experience and home study, with occasional courses at summer schools: teachers who doubtless would be even more valuable if normal graduates, but whose services in that would be even more valuable if normal graduates, but whose services in that case would be lost to the town and probably to the state. The situation above outlined will explain why but one of the vacancies occurring this year was filled by the appointment of a graduate of a Connecticut normal school. Their best are almost sure to be lost after one year, and we are not justified in employing their poorest graduates without at ison attempting to do beter."

Inspected Sewer Filter Beds.

C. B. Wheatley of the court of burgesses and Civil Engineer William K. Pike were at South Framingism. Naitic and Westboro, Mass., on Tuesday for the purpose of topsetting the sewer filter beds at those places.

They secured much information that may be valuable to the borough when the time comes to arrange for the new sewer terminal.

It is not believed that sewer beds will be necessary on the borough farm at present though it may be decided to plow furrows through the site of the proposed beds, thus providing for the absorption of sewage, and save the expense of building a terminal line the entire distance to the river.
